God, a fa

worthy of lives. The as a pure,

Robert Coliver on Ingersoll.

The Rev. Robert Collyer spoke Sunday night to a congregation in the Church of the Messiah, at Thirty-fourth street and Park Avenue, New York, upon the work of Robert Ingersoll.

I count that rather a wonderful sight," he said, "that we see and hear of now and then in this city and neighboring cities, when great public halls are crowded to meet and welcome this arch-champion of atheism, and to hear what he has to say, generally about faith in God, that faith, which, beyond all other things, has moved and molded the human mind in all ages, Those who watch the signs of the times closely will see that the most of those who crowd to see Ingersoll also flock to hear Moody when he is here; in fact, they are the people who will go to any place where a good time is to be had. The case is much as a great English statesman once put it, when his attention was called to the cheering of a crowd that was waiting for him: 'Most of them would do that if they had come to see me hung.' The most prominent characteristic of Ingersoll's present work is his want, of charitable consideration of those who do not believe as he does. This was not his earliest manner. It was my fortune not long since to spend a morning with him on a train, and that gentleness. which is so pleasant to see in an opponent blew through our little contentions like the summer wind through the bluebells on the hillsides, which are swayed to and fro but straighten up after every breeze passes. I don't expect to find him the same on the platform as he was that morning. The seeking for applause and laughter, the playing for the Bowery boys, lowers and makes coarse the work of anyone who indulges in it. The Mr. Ingersoll roystering round at $25,000 a year, as the common talk has it, is not the Ingersoll of years ago when he was working all alone in Peoria and winning the respect even of those who could not understand his position. There is not much danger that atheism will make great progress, with its greate st apostle appearing constantly in motle y as his best method of work, and whoey er goes about with a chip on his shoulder incessantly is sure to be voted a nuisance. Intolerance can never help the advocacy of atheism any more than it car, its opponents. No man of common sense believes some things in the books of Moses, books that are full of beauty and truth, however; but there is no man that hadn't far better believe everything about the serpent, the the apple and the ark than Mr. Ingersoll's doctrine that there is no God. I can agree in nothing with the faith of a man who tells me that his mission is to destroy men's faith in their God. I have no stones to throw at atheism any more than at a blind man. It can never be an institution; it can never be more than a destitution. As it was well said recently, atheism is a plant that won't grow in our hardy Anglo Saxon soil. One thing is certain, however, those who believe in God and not in some mere surmise about God have got to stand firmly together, as the heroes of twenty years ago stood firmly for the Union. I'll wade chin deep into the fight by the side of shouting Methodist or watery Baptist, though he baptize me twice a year, under the old flag of the Almighty. All minor issues must be cast aside till this question is settled for all time. And we, as we stand, the pioneers of the truest, fairest faith in God, a faith that needs not the serpent nor the ark to lean upon, but fronts the light boldly, we shall grow ever more worthy of His truth by showing it in our There is no argument so invincible lives. as a pure, true life."

THE HYMN OF (ANCIENT) MAN.

A SONG AFTER SUNSET.

Have ye known me at last for your father, O children of bimaneus brood?

Come turn and he duiful rather than foster your pride with strange food.

Com ye search out your lineage and span it, or fell the beginning of life. In the the warst freak of the planet, the stir of the war and the target?

From the day spand in the target?

From the day spand in the planet, the stir of the war and the target?

From the day spand in the planet, the stir occurred based on of storms.

The sense of the creature woke slowly through facued invertebrate forms:

Boneless and cycless they wallowed in depths of unsearchable seas;

Bindly they caught or were swallowed, half-sentient of craving and ease:

Until in the day's high meridian, the hour of the fullness of time.

Came forth the elect, the Ascidian, from the conflict of sea and of slime;

And delying fate's makes that mocks us there were formed to the warders in power.

A lord of we they actes in power.

A lord of we they actes in power.

A lord of the were.

The search out you want to their backhone, each reptile and fish in his kind:

Their soms longed for heaven's clear heat, and the sun-litten sky's tree fire.

They cast off their trapping of gills, and were noutshed with bountiful air.

And some were made feathery with quills, and and some were made feathery with quills, and some were made feathery with quills, and some were made feathery with quills, and and an are was a noise of morth and thunder of resonant wings.

In due season I also arose, with fur and a flexible tail,

And some were made feathery with quills, and ears pointed, as Darwin well shows; I whose children are man and prevail.

An for my conspiring, full weak of their hands, with long words in their mouth!

Northward and southward they seek after darkness and hunger and drouth.

An for my conson of primeval delight, when a tropical soil.

My days for the morrow

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY .- The fiftieth and versary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Macy, was celebrated at their residence, No. 19 Bonney street, last evening, about fifty persons, mostly members of the Macy family, being present. The hale and happy couple gave their guests a hearty good er, and moved about the house with no tottering steps. Conspicuous in the parlor were, wrought in green leaves, the appropriate figures "1826" and "1876." Rev. Isaac H. Coe was present, and briefly alluded to a number of important events that have transpired during the past half century, and in well chosen words remarked upon the comparatively few instances occurring that married couples do not become from some cause sepa rated before living together even a quarter of a century.

Mr. Coe also read the following poems from friends abroad who were unable to be present on the festive occasion .

on the festive occasion:

NANTUCKET, Jan. 21, 1876.

My dear brother Charles, and his estimable wife, New Bedford:

Your kind invitation to be with you on the 28th inst. (being the occasion of celebrating your golden wedding.) is received, and in reply would say, had you been more considerate in your younger days, and been married in a less inclement season of the year, it would give us much pleasure to accept it, but as it is we must ask to be excused this time, promising, (if nothing happens to prevent), to be with you at the next semi-centennial anniversary, hoping that during that time, or such portion of it as may remain to you, you will enjoy a full share of health and happiness.

Herewith please find a trifle, which you will accept, not as a gift or present, but as a remembrance of the uninterrupted brotherly affection that has existed between us for three score and ten years, and also as a remembrance of the uninterrupted brotherly affection kindness always received from your affectionate wife.

We enclose a few lines written for the occasion, which you will please accept.

From your affectionate brother and sister,

JOSIAH AND CARRIE.

Dear frieuds, so long beloved by all,

Dear friends, so long beloved by all, It is no empty form That brings us to your home to-night With heartfelt greeting warm.

While looking in the genial glow A golden wedding make, Who through the long years past, its flight Our winged spirit takes.

When Hymen lit the bridal torch
Full fifty years ago,
In nuptual love, two hearts were bound,
While life was in its glow.

Two lives then mingled into one, With all their hopes and fears, Blending in perfect unison Have happier grown with years.

As one by one, life's ring was set With jewels rich and fair, Whose filial love so well repaid Their parent's ceaseless care.

There was a cheery, happy home
On yonder native isle;
That pictured group through memory's haze
On this scene, seems to smile.

When three score years and ten have fled Without a wave of strife, No clouds obscure the western sky— The setting sun of life.

Sinking in tranquil joy, to rise On summer lands beyond, Where parted spirits reunite, And aspirations fond,

With noblest aims we ever knew, And hopes so cherished here, Will find a full fruition in That higher, better sphere.

TO MR. AND MRS. CHARLES MACY. A GOLDEN WEDDING GREETING.

Full fifty years their course have rolled, And Time on wings has sped its way, Since youth, health, beauty and love In union blessed the marriage day,

Raven locks and flaxen curls
Have given place to sober Grey
And mellowed age with charms its own
Grace now the golden wedding day.

We bridge the years to-night my friends— Forget as 'twere the lapse of time— Let fancy have her perfect sway, And memory's garlands fondly twine.

But few remain to roam with us
Or call to mind that day of yore;
The most have gently passed to rest,
And earth will know them never more.

But far beyond the rolling tide They wait the lowed and cherished here; Life's conflict d'er, life's burdens done, Forever banished doubts and fears.

We linger yet, subdued and sad, The missing links we deeply feel; We bow submissive 'neath the rod, But sorrow's trace cannot conceal.

In manhood's prime and childhood's hour They passed above to join the blest; The Master called—their time was o'er, Their work well done—in peace they rest.

And you, dear friends, whom God has blest To reach this golden wedding day, May blessings countless be your lot, And loving kindness cheer your way.

May years of bliss be yet in store, And life flow on in calm repose. In God your trust, in Him your hope, A peaceful life and blessed close. Nantucket, Jan. 24, 1876.

HOW THE CZAR IS CROWNED.

An Interesting Description of the Ceremony at Kremlin, Moscow.

shows upon the white walls its great, black network.

The Assumption is the cathedral at Rheims, the Westminster Abbey of Russia. Here the emperors are crowned and here is preserved the ancient throne of the czars in carved wood, known as the throne of Wladimir-Monomaque. The pillars, arches and walls of this church, which was built from beginning to end by Italian architects in 1475, are ornamented by large Byzantine images of long-bearded saints, whose heads are shown upon a background of gold. Those holy personages in their purple garments look like a procession of Asiatic potentates, silent and stern.

The iconostasus of the Assumption is a dazzling wall of jewelry, a fabulous display of gold, of precious stones, of pearls and diamonds. To this wonderful wall are suspended miraculous images of great antiquity, virgins pearls and diamonds. To this wonderful wall are suspended miraculous images of great antiquity—virgins with dark eyes and brown skins that belonged to grand dukes and were brought from Novgorod, Pskof, Kiew and Constantinople. Their halos are constellated with precious stones that twinkle like little stars and shine like desparks. Upon their garments and red sparks. Upon their garments and dalmaties of gold, topazes, sapphires, emeralds and rubies display marvelous embroideries that interlace each other like garlands of flowers. The miraculous image of the virgin of Wladimir that orthodox piety attributes to St. Luke wears a diamond necklace valued at 200,000 rubies. Emeralds s large as nuts are set in the massive golden crown of this Virgin.

Close to the iconostasus a canopy Close to the iconostasus a canopy covers the chair of the Patriarch, and in front of it a velvet tent marks the place of the emperor. Lamps of silver and vermilion with flickering lights, and great wax candles with their steady and soft jets, are not sufficient to awaken the obscurity that sleeps under the somber vaults of the old cathedral.

The ceremonies of the coronation take place in this church with a pomp and splendor that are peculiarly oriental. Before the czar arrives the high priests with the cross, assisted by two deacons carrying the holy water in a basin of gold, sprinkle the passage that the emperor is about to take. Then, arranging themselves upon the steps that surround the imperial platsteps that surround the imperial platform surmounted by a canopy of crim-son velvet with tassels and fringes of gold, come the grand dukes and duchesses, all the members of the imperial family, the diplomatic corps, the high dignitaries of the empire, senators in red uniforms, ministers bedizened with badges and cordons, marshals in brilliant uniforms, ladies of the court, and young ladies of the national costume, including the balls by the court of the red of the court. ing the kakochnik (a golden diadem embroidered in gold or pearls), repre-sentatives of the merchants of all the cities of the empire, most of them in cities of the empire, most of them in blue or black gowns fringed in gold, deputations from Asiatic peoples allied to or subjects of the emperor, Chinese, Mongolians, Tartars, Baskirs, Kalmuks, Khirgees, Boukharas, Circassians, Georgians, Mingrelians, Laplanders, Esquimaux, Persians, Turcomans—a strange and wild mixture of the traces, half clad and armed, the bows or lances, others with the silver handles, or swords the rudely carved.

The Kremlin, with its high walls of white stone, with battlements cut out in the form of Tartar arrowheads, its eighteen green towers and its five rose colored gates, is quite a town in itself, containing three cathedrals, seven churches, a monastery, a nunnery and three imperial palaces.

Let us speak first of the three most venerable sanctuaries, the cathedrals of Assumption, the Annunciation and the Archangel St. Michael, grouped in a single cluster like a sheaf with golden ears, inclosed by an iron railing that shows upon the white walls its great, black network. matics sparkling with gems. The metropolitans, led by the metropolitan of Kiew, holding censers await the arrival of the emperor.

At last the czar appears. He descends the red staircase upon which a persion carrect flowered with recess in and he walks under a large canopy that puts over his head a flock of golden eagles in a blue sky.

The metropolitan of Moscow presents him the cross to kiss, while the metropolitan of Novgorod sprinkles him with holy water. The princes of the church conduct the czar to the throne. Then the metropolitan of Moscow approaches his imperial majesty and presents him with the orthodox profession of faith, which the czar reads aloud, standing with his hand upon the guard of his sword. After reading hie receives the two metropolitans of Kiew, who ascend the steps of the throne and bring him the coronation mantle. The czar takes it from their hands and places it upon his shoulders. Then he bows before the metropolitan of Moscow, who places his hands over him and recites a prayer.

Einelly the car arises majestic and a prayer.
Finally, the czar arises majestic and superb, dressed in his mantle of bro-cade linen with ermine, and, taking the imperial crown sparkling with dia monds, he places it with his own hands upon his head. At this moment the empress advances and kneels before her august spouse, who, taking off his crown, holds it an instant over the forehead of the czarina in token of her charge in his owningtence.

her share in his omnipotence.

In the courtyard of the Kremlin the cannons thunder. The three hundred churches of Moscow ring their joy bells and the vaults of the old cathedral are filled with songs of gladness and of triumph.

The mass begins. The silver doors of the iconostasus are opened. The archbishops of Novgorod and of Kiew approach the emperor and inform him that all is ready for the annointment. The czar descends from the throne. The empress accompanies him to the door of the sanctuary, the threshold of which no woman can cross. The metropolitan of Moscow then dips in the vase that contains the holy oil the the vase that contains the holy oil the golden branch that he holds in his hand, and anoints the temples, the eyelids, the nostrils, the lips, the breast and the hands of the czar while uttering the words: "Behold the seal of the Holy Ghost." And after each holy unction the metropolitan of Novgorod wipes away the traces. The ancient czars for seven days used not to wash the parts of their bodies that had thus been annointed. been annointed.

Conducted to the altar, the czar p takes of the communion, while the empress, still kneeling at the door of the iconostasus, receives also the communion from the metropolitan of communion from the metropolitan of Kiew. With the crown upon his head the new czar departs through the north portal, passes between a double row of Cossacks, armed with lances, and of Grenadiers with gilded helmets, and amid the applause of the populace enters the cathedral of the Archangel, St. Michael, where he kisses the holy images, after which he re-enters the ancient palace by the red staircase.

The repast of the coronation is given in the Terem. The emperor and the empress, served by the marshals of the court, eat alone.
